SOURCES & CREDITS

Sources

The images in this unit unless otherwise noted are illustrations from the 1898 edition of the Dianshizhai huabao, generously provided by the Sterling Memorial Library at Yale University. We are grateful to Ellen Hammond and the Yale Visual Resources Collection for digitization of the text.

NOTES

Chapter 1: Picture Windows

1 This and much of the information that follows is drawn from Rudolf G. Wagner, “Joining The Global Imaginaire: the Shanghai Illustrated Newspaper Dianshizhai huabao”, and Ye Xiaoqing, The Dianshizhai Pictorial: Shanghai Urban Life, 1884-1898.

2 Cynthia Brokaw, ... in From Woodblocks to the Internet: Chinese Publishing and Print Culture in Transition, Circa 1800 to 2006, p....

3 Translation adapted from Wagner, p134.

4 The edition we reproduce here is not the original run, but an 1897 [???? Get PP to make some notes?] reprint that excises the supplementary material described here, as well as the dates. See Wagner, p. 131.

Chapter 2: Shanghai Myths

3 See Wasserstrom, Global Shanghai, 1850-2010 (Routledge, 2009), pp. 4-6 and passim, for a fuller explanation of this version of the city's past and relevant citations. For a recent reiteration of the "fishing village" idea, see the following statement in "A Short History of Shanghai" dated 2006 and attributed to Fodor's that appears on the New York Times travel site: "Until 1842 Shanghai's location made it merely a small fishing village." [see "A Short History of Shanghai" NY Times link]

4 For the history of the Bund, as evidenced through images, see "The Shanghai Bund: A History through Visual Sources" [view]; on Fonteyn quote, see Barbara Baker, ed., Shanghai: Electric and Lurid City: An Anthology (Hong Kong: Oxford University Press, 1998).

5 For examples, see the illustrations scattered through Ye Xiaoqing, The Dianshizhai...
Pictorial: Shanghai Urban Life 1884-1898 (Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Center for Chinese Studies, 2003), such as the images of Chinese convict laborers laying down a macadamized road (p. 43), Chinese using Western-style horse-drawn coaches (p. 45), Chinese standing before the Big Ben-style Customs House clock installed in 1893 (p. 74), and a Western customer being waited on by Chinese shop workers in a store selling imported goods (p. 75).

6 A postcard showing a Sikh policeman in the Public Garden [view]; for more on Sikhs in Shanghai, as well as an image of the two East-meets-East symbols just described in juxtaposition—a Sikh policeman standing by nickshaw pullers [view]. There were also police from Indochina in the French Concession police force, two of whom are portrayed in this photograph [view] but they do not figure as iconic a manner—e.g., finding their way onto postcards as key representatives of the French Concessions—as the Sikh, who were not infrequently featured in International Settlement postcards, do.

7 Ye, p. 72, shows Sikh and Chinese police, rather than Sikh and Western ones who maintain order; in that Dianshizhai image, the China-meets-the-West dimensions of the visual comes from the main object shown: a roller coaster.

8 For more on the concept of “reglobalization,” see my Global Shanghai.

Chapter 3: Machines in the City

Chapter 4: Drama and the City

1 Rania Huntington, "The Weird in the Newspaper,” 369.

2 See also Catherine Yeh, Shanghai Love: Courtesans, Intellectuals, and Entertainment Culture, 1850-1910 (Washington, 2006), p. 76.

4 The term “intercalary fish” (runyu 閏魚) comes from Kongtongzi (空同子), a work by the Ming poet Li Mengyang (1472-1529), in which he describes hearing of an odd kind of fish that can only be seen in the East China Sea during an intercalary year (a year in which an extra month is inserted in the calendar to compensate for the gradual deviation of calendrical time from astronomical time).

5 The headline puns on a well-known phrase, pengtuan, meaning “a great beginning” but literally deriving from the words “the Peng takes off.”

6 Such issues are explored in, or example, Larissa (Ari) Heinrich, The Afterlife of Images: Translating the Pathological Body between China and the West (Duke, 2008); Dorothy Ko, Cinderella’s Sisters: A Revisionist History of Footbinding (California, 2007); Timothy Brook, Jérôme Bourgon, and Gregory Blue, Death by a Thousand Cuts (Harvard, 2008); and Michael Berry, A History of Pain: Trauma in Modern Chinese Literature and Film (Columbia, 2011).

7 For more on this forensic method and its significance, see Daniel Asen, Dead Bodies and Forensic Science: Cultures of Expertise in China, 1800-1949 (PhD dissertation, Columbia University, 2012) pp. 89-104.

8 The article is translated and quoted at length in Xiaoqing Ye, 135.

9 Ibid.
Huntington, 373. See also Ye, 171.

The headline plays on a number of similar expressions such as “not the least bit ['a hair's breadth'] of difference” (haofa wucha 毫髮無差).

Wagner provides overall counts for illustrators in "Joining the Global Imaginaire", 142.

The joke references a tale of the Western Jin (265-313 CE), in which Lu Zhu, a concubine of the general Shi Jilun (Shi Chong), committed suicide by leaping from a high floor rather than be seized by his rival.

Zürcher; Goossaert; Goossaert and Palmer. See also Rebecca Nedostup, "The Temple Bell that Wouldn't Ring," Envisioning Chinese Society in the Late Nineteenth Century: Words and Images from the Dianshizhai Pictorial, China Gateway, from which this text is partly adapted.

Kathryn Edgerton-Tarpley, Tears from Iron: Cultural Responses to Famine in Nineteenth-Century China (California 2008); “Pictures to Draw Tears from Iron” published on Visualizing Cultures; Tobie Meyer-Fong, What Remains: Coming to Terms with Civil War in 19th Century China (Stanford, 2013); Goossaert and Palmer chapters 1 and 4.

One wonders if this is an early version of the 20th-century funeral stripper phenomenon in Taiwan, documented by Marc L. Moscowitz in “Dancing for the Dead.”

Translation from Ye, 199-200.

CREDITS

"Shanghai's Lens on the News" was developed by Visualizing Cultures at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and presented on MIT OpenCourseWare.

MIT Visualizing Cultures:

John W. Dower
Project Director
Emeritus Professor of History

Shigeru Miyagawa
Project Director
Professor of Linguistics
Kochi Prefecture-John Manjiro Professor of Japanese Language and Culture
Ellen Sebring
Creative Director
Author, essay

Scott Shunk
Program Director

Andrew Burstein
Media Designer

In collaboration with:

Rebecca Nedostup
Associate Professor of History
Brown University
Author, essay

Jeffrey Wasserstrom
Chancellor’s Professor of History
University of California Irvine
Author, essay

Peter C. Perdue
Professor
Department of History
Yale University

SUPPORT

Funding for this website was provided by:

- The J. Paul Getty Foundation
- The Henry Luce Foundation
- The Andrew Mellon Foundation
- The U.S. Department of Education

---

“Shanghai’s Lens on the New(s)”
chap. 5,  p. 4